EMM systems can be used to improve incident reporting

The use of electronic medication management and clinical information systems can be used to improve the rate and quality of medication error reporting in Australian hospitals, new research suggests. In a study published in the International Journal for Quality in Health Care, researchers led by Johanna ... [read more]

Team-based care using home monitoring technologies

Preliminary results from a integrated home telehealth project involving team care arrangements and a variety of readily available technologies has shown that cost savings through nurse visiting and travel time can offset the cost of the equipment, and potentially lead to better health outcomes for patients ...
